Use email for important communications

- Helps keep track of the conversation
- Documents the discussion for further consideration
- Decide what is most important to communicate
- Be succinct
- Don't overwhelm teachers with daily emails
- Don't email at all hours of the day and night

Review your child's current IEP

- important dates
- “present levels” in the IEP
- current needs
 - do the goals “fit”?
 - are the accommodations up to date?

Does the IEP “fit” your child’s current needs?

- The IEP identifies special education and related service supports needed for a student with a disability — are revisions necessary?
- If you believe the current IEP (or BIP) needs revision, request an IEP meeting.
- An interim IEP meeting (45-days, 60-days after school year begins) may be helpful to schedule in advance

Communicating with teachers

- What to communicate
- How
- When
- With Whom

WHAT to communicate

- Introductory letter to the teacher(s)
- Narrow down your list to top 5 things
- Most important things to know for first week
- Why are these things essential to know?

WHAT to communicate

- Autism, ADHD, [disability] all affect children in different ways. Provide specifics on how your child's disability affects them.
- Accommodations that are essential and why (important for ALL teachers, especially general educators)
- Anything going on at home that may affect your child's learning (social emotional needs affect learning)

WHAT to communicate

- Child's strengths
- What your child needs help with

WHAT to communicate

“Share the little things that [you] do for the child at home. For example, if the student needs help with ordering lunch or opening food items. Or, if there are any sign approximations that would be helpful for staff to understand.”

“Share prompts that are helpful—verbal, visual, gestural. Share social stories and strategies that helpful. Share, share, share!”

HOW to communicate

- Email
- Phone for sensitive conversations
- Informal meeting
- IEP meeting

Early on, it's a good idea to ask teachers how they generally prefer to be contacted and how quickly parents should expect a reply.

WHEN to communicate

Communicate early—touch base by Thursday (this week!) so the teacher can respond if necessary on Friday.

If you have questions or concerns after the first day of school, it's ok to ask them. (Of course the first week of school will have bumps for kids, parents, and teachers!) Do not wait until there is a crisis to communicate, but also be realistic as everyone is getting settled.

WITH WHOM to communicate

- Direct email to your child's teacher(s) instead of group emails initially
- Communicate directly with the general educator(s) as well as the special educator
- Copy the case manager
- Consider related service providers (school psychologist, nurse, speech teacher) and what they may need to know specific to their role

Be open minded.

While things may have not gone well the year before, give your teacher a chance to try new strategies or adapt techniques to fit your child's needs.

Partner with your teacher— together come up with a plan when new strategies are needed.

Be positive.

Your attitude matters—to teachers and to your child (and/or children)

Keep your expectations high

Participate in school meetings and activities, volunteer, chaperone—get involved in the school community

Give your child and teachers time to adjust

Keep the lines of communication open as everyone settles back in

Tell teachers what is working (not just what isn't)

Acknowledge the challenges teachers are facing too
